The Cape Fold Belt is a fold and thrust belt of late Paleozoic age, which affected the sequence . This is due in part to numerous geological factors; The ranges usually have few to no foothills and rise directly from valley floors. . The Peninsula formation can be traced from km north of Cape Town (i.e. about 50 km north).

Many tall buildings in the Cape Town CBD are founded on these rocks, which were in most places scoured by wave action during past periods of higher sea.
